This year, OPA and the Polshek Partnership finished the design of the Penn State University Dickinson School of Law. When the project began in 2006, the design team prepared extensive analysis of the School's program and conditions of the proposed building sites in order to optimize the combination in the form of the final building. These illustrations are samples of programming and site analysis. The site drawing shows paths of movement juxtaposed with visual connections; this indicated where the project needs architectural emphasis. Also shown is one of the program analyses, demonstrating the function of each program component, in order that the generators, facilitators, mixing and gathering spaces are properly sequenced and expressed.
